

Endophthalmitis often causes an hypopyon which is the small level of yellowish fluid at the bottom of the iris. This is a significant finding and prompts immediate referral. Hypopyon can be seen in other conditions (e.g. iritis & infection) however it always indicates serious pathology which requires an immediate referral.