

This is an acute angle closure. Often the eye is not red. The pupil is mid dilated and non-reactive to light. The pupil is also light grey and the detail of the iris is not as clear on account of the cloudy cornea (corneal oedema).

This is a picture of the above patient's unaffected eye for comparison. Note the difference in the patient's pupils, the clearer iris details and the clear pupil.